Suzuki provides a SX4 model to the United Nations Association

When there's educational work to do Suzuki of the Caribbean will do the running around. The local company has provided a Suzuki SX4 model to the Puerto Rico Division of the U.S. United Nations Association.

The SX4 will be used for official errands related to improving the curriculum of schools, colleges, and universities.

The goal of the official car is to help this non-profit organization promotes citizen participation to enhance social and economical conditions.

“Our primary goal is to promote educational programs and activities that benefit public school, private school, and college students,” said UNA - USA PR President Jorge R. González, who thanked Suzuki for being a sponsor.

“We use world renowned educational programs such as Model United Nations to develop research, writing, forensics, negotiation, and conflict resolution skills.”

The association also encourages values like respect, dialogue, team work, and consensus, having students and community leaders assume an active role to solve their problems by acting locally while thinking globally.

“Education is a basic element for progress,” said General Manager John Bowen. “It is the best tool to eradicate, little by little, the social problems that affect our children and youth. We hope this contribution to the UNA - USA PR will help take a step forward in this direction.” As part of its corporate social responsibility policy, Suzuki of the Caribbean collaborates with different entities “that work intensely to offer them the tools to build a better future for society.”
